

Emergency Prep

Emergency Preparedness Audits - Not If, But When Disaster Strikes...

In this course you will learn how to determine if your emergency management protocol is compliant with the Standardized Emergency Management System and the National Incident Management System (SEMS/NIMS) and how to incorporate the Incident Command System into your process. You will also learn best practices as it relates to emergency supplies, communication protocols and business continuity

Bio

Robin is experienced in providing risk management consulting services to various unified school districts and community colleges to ensure regulatory compliance with respect to safety and environmental issues, as well as for ensuring emergency plans were updated and training was conducted. She also has experience developing written disaster plans for community colleges serving approximately 40,000 students and over 2,000 staff and faculty. She's had frequent interaction with other members of emergency planning organizations including, but not limited to, Water Emergency Response Organization of Orange County (WEROC), California State University Emergency Managers, Orange County Emergency Management Organization (OCEMO), American Red Cross, and the health care agency. Participation in drills and exercises conducted by Orange County Sheriff's Department at the Emergency Operations Center (EOC). Participation in various workshops and meetings/briefings conducted by the California Emergency Management Agency (CalEMA) and special districts in both Los Angeles and Orange County. Robin has spent a significant amount of time overseeing and providing guidance to Emergency Management Planning teams for community which included coordinating training to meet FEMA reimbursement requirements in the case of a declared state of emergency. She was also responsible for facilitating meetings to develop District and/or campus specific procedures/policies for various teams in the Incident Command System (ICS) organizational structure. Robin also served as an honorary member of the Disaster Resistance California Community College (DRCCC) task force, a State Chancellor's office emergency management group. Lastly Robin is well versed in conducting audits of emergency preparedness programs at k-12 and college districts.

